

Managementors' engagement with Leading UK Decommissioning Site

Initially Managementors were engaged by the contractor - a leading construction and regeneration group - to undertake an analysis of two of their challenging construction projects. A team of analysts spent two weeks on site and through a mixture of observation, data analysis and structured interviews, a series of findings were pulled together and presented back to both the contractor and their client – the leading UK decommissioning site. These findings subsequently formed the basis of a second phase engagement to overcome the challenges identified.

The ensuing engagement focused on enabling far greater collaboration between both companies at all levels of the operation. This has been achieved through the following actions:

"Managementors have made a real difference to how the teams interact and work together.

There is much closer collaboration and I'm really pleased with the new project discipline."

Client Project Director

"I was a little sceptical at first, but Managementors ability to remain objective, cut through the politics and work hand in glove with the teams to deliver the outcomes has really impressed me."
